The 50th Anniversary of the
New York
Mets
Conference

is dedicated to the memory of

DR. DANA BRAND (1954-2011)

Professor Dana Brand, former chair of the Hofstra University Department of English and a lifelong Mets fan, was a scholar and critic of American literature and late 19th- and early 20th-century culture. He joined the Hofstra faculty in 1989, and throughout his career at Hofstra, he produced not only academic books and articles on topics in literature, philosophy, and film, but also personal essays. Some of these essays became the basis for his book Mets Fan, which was released in 2007. His second book about baseball fandom, The Last Days of Shea, was published in 2009, and his efforts in the blogosphere earned him the nickname “The Proust of Mets Bloggers” in The New York Times.

From Professor Brand’s essay “Baseball and the Life of the Mind” (relating a conversation he had while a graduate student at Yale with Bart Giamatti, J. Hillis Miller, and Jacques Derrida): “We were just, for that moment, some people talking about things we loved deeply. We knew that we didn’t understand our love of sports any more than anyone else. But we were happy to stand out in the cold and share the fact that we loved it.”

And we loved him.
